Antietam National Cemetery.

---

ONE of the striking indications of civilization and refinement among a people, is the tenderness and care manifested by them towards their dead, in the location and erection of suitable resting places for their remains, and their embellishment and ornamentation in an appropriate and becoming manner, thus robbing the grave of its terrors and death of its repulsiveness, by appealing to the sense with all that is beautiful in Nature and Art.

But when the departed, with unselfish disinterestedness, have rendered the offering of their lives as a sacrifice upon the altar of their country, it becomes not only a privilege, but a duty, which gratitude demands and rejoices in.

Animated by such sentiments as these, as well as by the dictates of a common humanity, the originators of the Antietam National Cemetery relaxed no efforts in the accomplishment of their design, to locate on this Acchidama, which was truly a field of blood, a suitable spot for the establishment of this national Necropolis.

The blood of the red man and the white man alike, have dyed with their crimson hue, though at distant intervals of time, the waters of the Antietam.

Tradition informs us that a most bloody affair occurred on the Antietam, near its mouth, more than a century before the sanguinary conflict between Generals McClellan and Lee, between those hostile and warlike tribes of savages—the Catawbas and Delawares, who, it is said, were engaged in strife when this section of the country was first known, and they so continued for a long period subsequent. This event, to which we here make reference, occurred sometime between the years 1730 and 1736. The evidences of this conflict are still apparent in the skeletons which from time to time are exhumed.

The few particulars we have been able to glean concerning it, are as follows: It seems that the Delawares had made an incursion far to the South, and in returning had committed some gross outrages and flagrant wrongs on the Catawbas, and on their retreat they were overtaken near the mouth of the Antietam by the exasperated Catawbas, when a terrible conflict ensued between them, which resulted in putting to death every man of the former tribe, with the exception of one, who escaped after the battle was over. But it was only for a time. Every warrior among the Catawbas showed a scalp with the exception of one. He felt this to be a disgrace which his sensitive nature could not brook, and he instantly set out in pursuit of the fugitive, and, with the sagacity of a bloodhound, tracked him across mountain, hill and stream, for a hundred miles, until he overtook him on the Susquehanna river, when he killed and scalped him, showing his scalp in triumph to the whites whom he met as he was returning.

Thus Antietam is a historic name in our annals, rendered so by the memories and associations of the past and the present. The battle on this spot for the preservation of the Union, whilst it was one of the most indecisive of the war, was also one of the hardest fought and most sanguinary. From fifteen to twenty thousand lives were here sacrificed to the Moloch of war. The seventeenth day of September, A. D., 1862, the date of the battle, will ever remain memorable in the annals of our history.

For days and weeks subsequent to the battle, the stench arising from the field was so powerful that the surrounding atmosphere was heavily tainted by the effluvia which emanated from the effete and decaying matter.

In the confusion incident to a great battle after its cessation, with a retreating enemy in front, the bodies had in many instances been hurried into a shallow trench, and a few shovel-fuls of earth, hastily heaped over them, served the purposes of interment, while the carcasses of horses partly consumed, or charred by the fire, were profusely scattered over the field.

Although the remains of many of those who had fallen in the battles and skirmishes preceding this bloody conflict had been decently interred in the hospital graveyards, and their names had been properly recorded, still many of the slain buried on this spot were entirely unknown, and owing to the necessarily hasty and imperfect manner in which they had been interred, their bones, in numerous instances, were uprooted by the swine or overturned by the ploughshare, and left to bleach upon the surface of the ground which had been consecrated by the heroism of their deeds and the prowess of their arms.

Humanity required that duty, delayed already too long, should take action in some shape, and to the HON. LEWIS P. FIREY, a member of the Senate of Maryland, and a resident of Washington county, belongs the honor of, officially, first taking the necessary steps towards the practical inauguration of the idea of establishing the present Cemetery.

At its session in 1864, this gentleman introduced a resolution into the Senate of Maryland, appointing a joint committee, consisting of three members on the part of the Senate and an equal number on the part of the House, "to inquire into the propriety of purchasing, on behalf of the State, a portion of the battle-field of Antietam, not exceeding twenty acres, for the purposes of a State and National Cemetery, in which the bodies of our heroes who fell in that great struggle and are now bleaching in the upturned furrows, may be gathered for a decent burial, and their memories embalmed in some suitable memorial."

It was but a few days after the appointment of the committee, that they visited in person the battle-field, and after making a careful survey, selected that most eligible and beautiful site where the National Cemetery is now located. At the same time they obtained from the proprietor of the land a positive offer of sale on favorable terms.

Upon their return to Annapolis, in their report to the General Assembly, they recommended the purchase of ten acres of the ground for the uses and purposes of a State and National Cemetery.

The General Assembly of the State, acquiescing in the views and approving the recommendation of the committee, subsequently, on the tenth of March, 1864, unanimously passed an Act by which was appropriated the sum of five thousand dollars, to be placed in the hands of the Governor, to be applied to the purchase and enclosure of a portion of the battle-field, not exceeding ten acres, and authorizing him to appoint an agent to superintend the work of enclosing the Cemetery, and of exhuming the bodies of deceased soldiers of Maryland and New York, and other States, if required, and providing that those who fell in the army of General Lee should be buried in a separate portion of the Cemetery from that, designed for those who fell under General McClellan.

In accordance with the provisions of the foregoing Act, Gov. Bradford, in company with several other gentlemen, visited Sharpsburg on an appointed day, for the purpose of making the purchase aforesaid, and the Governor contracted for ten acres, at the sum of one hundred dollars per acre. But some time after the conclusion of the contract, it was ascertained that the title to the land was defective, on account of the disability of one of the parties interested in the land, who was confined in the lunatic asylum in Staunton, Virginia. The war still being in progress, it was impossible to ascertain whether this party was living at the time of the making of the contract or not, and it was not until the close of the war that the title was perfected. The property, moreover, was owned by heirs living in different States, and hence an additional cause of delay, as it required some time to obtain a deed from persons scattered in different portions of the Union. These facts account satisfactorily for the delay unavoidably occasioned in the enclosure of the grounds and the removal of the dead.

The State of New York was designated by name in the Act, because shortly after the battle, through her State agent, who visited the field to attend and minister to the wants and necessities of the troops from that State engaged in the battle, an active and earnest sympathy was manifested in behalf of the accomplishment of the objects and purposes of the Act, and an offer of State co-operation was also tendered at this stage of the incipient measures taken for the success of the contemplated undertaking.

The Act of 1864, however, having been found to contain no practicable provisions for the establishment of a National Cemetery, and nothing having been accomplished under it, save the selection of the present site, it was deemed advisable to repeal it and to secure the passage of another better adapted to the desired end. Hence, subsequent legislation upon the subject was had at the session of the General Assembly held in the winter of 1865, when the present act of incorporation was passed. The patron of the bill, Colonel E. F. ANDERSON, of Baltimore, a member of the House of Delegates from Washington county, Maryland, reported it to that body about the middle of the session, by which it was passed on the twentieth day of March of the last named year, and also by the Senate on the twenty-third of the same month, without a dissenting vote in either branch.

In the body of the Act the following persons were named as trustees for the State of Maryland, to wit: AUGUSTINE A. BIGGS, THOMAS A. BOULET, EDWARD SHRIVER and CHARLES C. FULTON, gentlemen who, amid all the trials, delays and difficulties ever attending such an enterprise, have never for a moment permitted themselves to be swerved from the patriotic discharge of the duty devolved upon them, and to whose earnestness, faithfulness and attention the success of the object had in view is in no small degree indebted.

These gentlemen, thus constituted the Board of local Trustees, held their first meeting on the 25th day of May, A. D. 1865, in Hagerstown, Maryland, and at once proceeded to organize by the election of Dr. A. A. BIGGS, as President, and THOMAS A. BOULET, as Secretary and Treasurer. On the day following its organization, the Board, in its official capacity, visited the grounds and personally inspected them.

The result of this visit and inspection, was the adoption of a resolution by the Board, authorizing the President to purchase additional ground on the east side of the land already contracted for, consisting of about one acre and a quarter, with a view of throwing out a ravine on the west side, which would add greatly to the expense of the preparation of the grounds if retained within the enclosure, and appropriating it as a kitchen garden for the use of the keeper of the Cemetery, when such an one should be thereafter selected by the Board. The purchase was accordingly made, and thereby the grounds enclosed for the burial of the dead have been more advantageously improved than they could have been had not this additional purchase have been made, and also an economy secured in the avoidance of a heavy expense.

At this same meeting the initiatory steps were taken to secure a list of the names of the dead, and to make a registry of the location of the graves. In the attainment of this desirable and important object, AARON GOOD, Esq. and JOSEPH A. GILL, residents of Sharpsburg, Washington county, Maryland, living in the vicinity of the battle-field, had in a measure worthily anticipated the action of the Board, and with a commendable zeal had, immediately after the battle, devoted their time and efforts to this truly humane and praiseworthy undertaking, with a success which had resulted in the collection of a large number of names and a carefully prepared register of the location of various graves which were scattered over a large section of country miles in extent, and which called for, on their part, great discrimination, patience and perseverance to accomplish. It would be impossible, were we so disposed, to withhold from these gentlemen that cheerful recognition of their inestimable services in this behalf, to which the merit of their work so justly entitles them. The signal services rendered by them were of such a character as to relieve this portion of the work of a great insurmountable burden under a different state of circumstances. The difficulties besetting them in the discovery of the names of the deceased were frequently solved by letters, receipts, diaries, memorandum books, photographs, or marks on the belts or cartridge boxes. Sometimes a soiled and crumpled letter found on the body, its characters scarcely decipherable on the well-worn and tear-stained page, would indicate the name, or the torn shred of an old handkerchief, or a ragged piece of garment on which had been wrought, by loving ones at home, the name of the departed. At other times the name of the dead was ascertained by diligent inquiry among his surviving comrades, by personal inspection on their part, or by the general description of his appearance and features, or by some well known scar which marked him. Many and diversified were the ways and means resorted to for identification, and it is astonishing with what success and certainty, in most instances. Many are the sad and bereaved hearts which have been consoled by the discovery, in the prosecution of this work of a father, husband, brother or son, for some tidings of whose fate the anxious and affectionate members of the household had hitherto waited in vain, until "hope deferred had made the heart sick," but which have now, through the employment of this instrumentality, found the certainty of rest which knowledge gives.

The Board therefore authorized the President to employ Mr. Good, one of these gentlemen, to complete the list which he had commenced, by going over the battle-field and making careful notes of all the information he could obtain, admonishing him at the same time to be as accurate as circumstances would justify or permit.

Under the provisions of this last named Act, it was, among other things, provided, that the grounds so purchased as aforesaid, were to be held by the State of Maryland, in fee simple, in trust for all the States that should participate as therein mentioned, and that the same should be devoted in perpetuity for the purpose of the burial and final resting place of the remains of the soldiers who fell at the battle of Antietam, or at other points north of the Potomac river, during the invasion of 1862, in the summer and fall of the year 1862, or who died thereafter in consequence of wounds received in said battles, or during said invasion; and that the grounds and property of said Cemetery should be forever free from the levy of any State, county or municipal taxes, and that the corporation thus formed should be released and exempted from the payment of any tax or taxes whatever that might be imposed by the then existing laws at the time of the passage of the Act. Strict provisions were also incorporated to prevent the mutilation or defacement of the tombstones and monuments, or the destruction or spoliation of the trees or shrubbery contained in the enclosure.

Under the liberal provisions of this generous charter the trustees, upon their organization, proceeded at once actively and energetically to the discharge of the sacred duties which devolved upon them, by making the necessary preparations for the enclosure in a suitable manner, the grading of the same preliminary to the removal of the dead, and the collection and arrangement of all the materials necessary thereto. To this end the Secretary was instructed to advertise for proposals and receive bids for the erection of a substantial stone wall around the grounds, and the President was requested to furnish all information as to the dimensions and materials to be used in building it. This was accordingly done, and a meeting of the Trustees was called for the purpose of examining and deciding upon any propositions which might be submitted, of which there were three, ranging in different amounts. But the funds at this period at the command of the Trustees being limited, and there being no regular plan for building the wall or grading of the grounds, it was thought best to reject all the proposals, which was done at a subsequent meeting of the Board, under a resolution to that effect.

For the accomplishment of as much work as possible with the limited means at the disposal of the Trustees, and to avoid the danger of improper expenditure of the funds in the hands of agents and contractors, who might have been interested only to the extent of their profits, it was determined to place the business and the general supervision of affairs in the hands of the President, Dr. A. A. Briggs, who at the same time was appointed general superintendent, with instructions to proceed at once with the grading and the quarrying of the necessary stone for the walls, for the lime, and to arrange for the coping stone, and to perform all other acts towards the accomplishment of the duties imposed upon the Trustees as in his judgment he might deem necessary.

The Superintendent at once entered upon the discharge of his duties by employing a large force, principally honorably discharged Union soldiers, to open the quarries and prepare the stone for the wall, at the same time that a similar force was engaged in removing the surface stone from the Cemetery grounds, which being unfit for the wall or to be burnt into lime, was, however, valuable for the foundation and for filling the inside of the raised part of the wall.

Up to this period of time but few of the States interested had become fully awakened to the importance of this great work, and the duty which they owed in the premises. Their means, their efforts and their attention had all been directed to the pendency of the great national struggle for existence, so, that it was not by reason of any indifference on their part, or lack of interest in the sacred objects of the Association, much less any desire to shirk the duty which their sense of patriotism doubtless recognized. But the echoes of the late conflict were still sounding in their ears, and the confusion engendered by their recent participation therein, prevented them from promptly engaging in the work until the subject was brought to their attention, under a resolution of the Board to the effect that circular letters be addressed to the Governors of the respective States interested in the Cemetery, urging upon them to recommend to their legislatures the importance of a sufficient appropriation to ensure the success of the enterprise, and of having their States represented in the Board.

At a meeting of the Board held at Sharpsburg, Maryland, on the 13th day of December, A. D. 1865, the Superintendent was authorized to prepare an estimate of the amount required to complete the Cemetery, showing the proportion of each State interested. In obedience to this expression, the following shows the estimated amount required to complete the same.

The above estimate was based upon the number of dead who fell in the battle of Antietam, according to the terms and provisions of the charter, but is not applicable to the altered circumstances as they now exist. At the suggestion of the Quartermaster General, all those who fell and were buried in the counties of Washington, Frederick and Allegheny, Maryland, were removed to this Cemetery, so that this amount should be understood by the reader with this qualification.

Up to the present time the only funds which had been appropriated to the purposes of the Cemetery, were seven thousand dollars by the State of Maryland, nearly all of which had been exhausted in the work already performed, and which would be entirely expended in a few weeks more.

In connection with the estimated amount required to complete the Cemetery, at the same time the following apportionment was calculated for, and set to each state interested, as its quota, corresponding to the number of its Representatives, in the House of Representatives of the United States, which apportionment was made under the eighth section of the Law of Maryland, passed March 23d, 1865, incorporating the Antietam National Cemetery, which reads as follows:

SECTION 8. Be it enacted, that the expenses incident to the removal of the dead, enclosing and ornamenting the Cemetery, and all the work connected therewith, and its future maintenance, shall be apportioned among the states connecting themselves with the corporation, according to their population, as indicated by their representation in the House of Representatives of the United States.

It is gratifying to be able to record the fact, that there has been a large saving in the estimated amount, which was deemed necessary to be expended for labor and materials in the completion of the work, which is due, in great part, to the ever vigilant and watchful care and economy practiced by the Superintendent, who gave to the work during its progress his undivided attention. The appropriations made by the different states amount to the sum of $62,229 77, which has been so judiciously expended as to do an amount of work, which at low estimates, it was deemed would require the expenditure of $85,852 32.

Although the apportionment of Maryland, as will be seen by reference to the foregoing table, was $2,787 40, yet her appropriation was, under the act of 1865, $7000. Subsequently the legislature, at its extra session in January, A. D. 1866, voted unanimously the additional appropriation of $8000, thus making the sum altogether appropriated by her, to amount to the sum of $15,000. During this winter appropriations from other States were made, so that the amount of funds appropriated to the 1st day of August, A. D. 1866, amounted in round numbers to $30,000. Other States interested continued, from time to time, to make their appropriations, so that the treasury has, ever since 1866, been in a condition to promptly discharge all its financial obligations, and to leave a surplus therein.

*Appropriated $7,000.

†Appropriated $1,000.

Whilst in one or two instances a State has failed to make the full amount of its appropriation to correspond to its apportionment, and in three instances no appropriation whatever has been made; in another instance the generous liberality of one has more than compensated for the deficiencies in the former. Doubtless, were it found necessary for the States referred to, to supply the deficiencies in the apportionment of their respective amounts, they would unhesitatingly and cheerfully do so. In the instances referred to where three States have failed entirely to make any appropriation, we believe the reason, in some degree, arises from the small number of dead from these States, who fell in this battle. And yet it would seem that a feeling of state pride, and a patriotic gratitude to her brave defenders, would have prompted her to have laid on the altar of a common country, such an offering as would assist in the preservation of the memory of her heroic dead, whether they be few or many. But no invidious discrimination has marked the motives or feelings of the Board, and the remains of the soldiers from all the loyal States, alike, without distinction, have received the same decent sepulture and attention at its hands.

The whole number of bodies interred in the Cemetery amount to four thousand six hundred and sixty-seven, a number exceeding those interred in the Gettysburg Cemetery by one thousand one hundred and three—the number of those buried in the latter being three thousand five hundred and sixty-four.

The removal of the dead was commenced in October, 1866, by the United States Burial Corps, detailed by the General Government for the purpose, under the superintendence of Lieutenant JOHN W. SHERER, and they continued their work until January, 1867, when, by reason of the severity of the weather, operations in that department were stopped. There had been removed up to that time about three thousand bodies. They resumed work in April, 1867, and finished their work in August of the same year. The local Trustees did not confine their action to the removal of the dead who fell at the battle of Antietam, but deemed it proper, at the suggestion of the authorities at Washington, to remove all the Federal dead who had been buried in Washington, Alleghany and Frederick counties, Maryland, believing that course to be in accordance with the patriotic spirit with which the appropriations were made for the establishment of the Cemetery. They were exhumed, placed in coffins, and delivered to the Superintendent, who buried them at the expense of the Association. In the burial of the dead every coffin was numbered, and a corresponding number entered in a book kept for this purpose, with the name, company, regiment and State, when they could be ascertained, so that, at any time, by reference to the records, the location of any grave can at once be found. The dead were buried under the immediate supervision and eye of the President, who held the tape line over every coffin deposited, and entered the name, number and company in his field-book, before any earth was replaced. By his record, therefore, any body can be identified at any time, when called for.

The trenches for the reception of the bodies are six feet in width and three feet in depth, one-third of which are quarried out of solid rock, which, to a great extent, underlies the ground of the Cemetery and the surrounding country. Two feet are allowed for each body. The coffins containing the bodies were furnished free of charge, through the generosity of the General Government.

A peculiarity characteristic of this Cemetery, and which should be here mentioned, is, that a person occupying a position in the centre of the grounds, with his face turned to any point of the compass, can, with a good field glass, read the inscription on every head-board contained therein. As yet no uniform character of head and foot-stones have been adopted by the Board, but a general plan for marking all the graves in a proper and suitable manner will, in a short period, be decided upon, when the present temporary and imperfect stones, and monuments erected by friends, will be removed.

At a meeting held in September, 1866, a design for an iron fence and gateway for the front line of the grounds was agreed upon, and, according to the instruction of the Board, a contract was made with Messrs. Robert Wood & Co., of Philadelphia, for a wrought iron fence, at six dollars per foot, and also for the gateway, at a cost of $880. It is substantial as well as ornamental, and its entire length is six hundred and six feet, eight inches without the gateway, which latter is twenty-six feet in width—sufficiently capacious to admit vehicles to pass each other in their ingress and egress.

A massive stone wall surrounds other portions of the grounds, of which it can be said in truth, that no more solid and durable wall has been erected as an enclosure for any other Cemetery in the country. This wall is of a uniform height, on the inside of five feet, including the coping, and varying on the outside from the height last named to ten and fifteen feet, owing to the unevenness of the surrounding ground, which is rolling and broken in its character, as were the grounds proper before filling up and grading the same. The coping on the wall is two feet five inches in breadth, and eight inches in thickness, and the whole length of the coping, if extended in a straight line, would measure twenty-seven hundred feet—making it over a half mile in length.

The Cemetery itself is located on a gentle rise, from whence a survey of almost the entire battle-field may be enjoyed, while within the scope of the eye's range lies an unobstructed tract of country, miles in extent, taking in the distant South

Mountain, memorable as the spot where Lee received his first check during the invasion of Maryland, and which caused him gradually to fall back with his army until it rested on the waters of the Antietam, and made a final stand only to be again defeated. In the far distance also looms up, in their majestic prominence, the continuous chain of the so-called Maryland heights, rendered notorious as the rendezvous of John Brown prior to his raid on Harper's Ferry. But a short distance from the foot of the Cemetery grounds flow the placid waters of Antietam, which gave its name to the conflict here waged, and which will be rendered memorable forever in story and in song.

The plan forms within the walls of the Cemetery a semi-ellipsis, divided into segments of circles, sections and parallelograms of varying size, to correspond with the number of the loyal dead from the different States represented in the battle, and each division is designated by a letter, and each section of graves is numbered in order. That portion of the grounds devoted to this purpose begins at a point within about one hundred and thirty feet from the main entrance to the Cemetery, thus leaving a large open space between it and the wall, which extends along the line of the Sharpsburg and Boonsboro' pike in front. A main carriage drive, about  $16\frac{1}{2}$  feet in width, leads from the entrance through the grounds, from which branches in different directions subordinate roads and walks leading to every part of the Cemetery, which are macadamized and graveled.

The grounds are thoroughly drained by a system of tubing, very complete, and which will prove very valuable in maintaining them in good condition against injury arising from heavy rains.

Near the entrance to the Cemetery, and within the enclosure, has been erected a neat and commodious Lodge House, designed for the occupancy of the keeper of the grounds, and the comfort and convenience of visitors.

In the centre of the ground plan of the Cemetery is an open space devoted to the erection of a monument commemorative of the great event of the battle, and the heroism of those who sleep at its foot and around it. The design of the monument, which was adopted at a meeting of the Board, held in the city of Baltimore, on the 16th day of September, 1867, seems to meet all requirements in a military, national and patriotic point of view. It is the Colossal Statue of an American Soldier standing guard over the remains of the loyal dead, and, when completed, will be the largest work of its kind in the country. The estimated cost is thirty thousand dollars. The Statue alone will weigh eighty-six tons.

The dedication of the grounds to the sacred purposes for which they were designed, occurred on the fifth anniversary of the battle—the 17th day of September, 1867—at which time also was laid the corner stone of the Monument, with appropriate ceremonies.

Through the sacrifices and blood they shed, and the lives they rendered up, the Union has been preserved, our institutions are unimpaired, and our Government is strengthened; therefore should we honor and keep green the memory of the loyal volunteer whose work has been accomplished, and the benefit of whose deeds and prowess as a Nation we to-day enjoy.

ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR SWANN.

THE ceremonies were commenced by Governor SWANN, who delivered a brief speech, which was cheered at the conclusion, as follows :

Fellow Countrymen—Before proceeding with the programme, which has been handed me by the Committee of Arrangements, it seems appropriate that, as the official organ of the State of Maryland, upon whose soil and with whose hearty co-operation this Cemetery has been founded, I should extend a cordial welcome to His Excellency the President of the United States and his Cabinet, the Governors of our sister States, and the distinguished guests who have come to participate in the ceremonies of this most interesting occasion.

During the administration of my immediate predecessor, the first appropriation was made by the State of Maryland towards establishing a burial place for the dead who fell upon the battle field of Antietam.

At a subsequent period, the appropriation thus made having been found inadequate, upon the application of the Commissioners charged with this trust, a further sum was added in response to a communication made by myself to the Legislature in this behalf. Maryland having thus done her share in providing a burial place for these brave and patriotic men, the co-operation of our sister States was invoked to lend their aid in throwing around it a national interest, and the most liberal contributions have been accordingly made by nearly all the States in the removal of their dead, the erection of monuments, and in adding to the attractiveness of this beautiful spot. The work, so far as it has progressed, is now before you.

The flag which floats over us to-day is the flag of our Union. The sword of battle has been sheathed. The tramp of contending armies, the embittered strife of father against son, and brother against brother, no longer resounds within our borders. The star of this great Republic is again in the ascendant. In the calm sunshine of peace we are here to mingle our tears with the survivors of the illustrious dead who have sacrificed their lives for their country, and are sleeping upon this field.

May I not, in this solemn hour, invoke the interposition of Almighty God for a speedy restoration of harmony and brotherly love throughout this broad land ; and that North, South, East and West, laying aside the animosities of the past, we may stand together hereafter, and in all future time, as one people, having a common origin and bound together by a common destiny? May this Union be perpetual.

Next followed prayer by Rev. HIRAM MATISON, D. D., of New Jersey. Then the hymn composed by Rev. EDWARD MEYER, was sung by the assemblage.

HYMN I.—Old Hundred.

“Aceldama!” O Lord, our God,
Who evermore dost Israel keep,
Watered in tears, baptized in blood,
Thou givest our beloved sleep.

They came at Freedom’s trumpet call,
From hall and cottage, fane and dome,
Venturing limb and life, and all
For Truth and Right, for hearth and home!

Thousands of heroes bit the dust,
Antietam, on thy crimson field!
Thrice armed were they, with quarrel just,
The Lord their banner, sun and shield.

Lift high the granite shaft for all
That fell where duty summoned them;
Their country’s star-gem’d flag their pall,
A Nation’s wail their requiem!

O Lord! and shall they live again,
These bones, the seed of crimson strife?
Thy Spirit breathes upon these slain,
And they shall thrill with endless life.

In living hope, then, we commit
This precious dust, for Freedom giv’n,
To thee, till angels gather it,
Transfigured, in the urn of Heav’n!

The corner stone of the Monument was then laid according to Masonic rites.

OPENING.

M. W. Grand Master.—Right Worshipful Senior Grand Warden: The Grand Lodge of Maryland having been assembled for the purpose of Laying the Corner-Stone of the Monument, here to be erected, it is my order that the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Maryland be now opened for the performance of that ceremony. This my will and pleasure you will communicate to the Right Worshipful Junior Grand Warden, and he to the Brethren present, that all having due notice may govern themselves accordingly.

Senior Grand Warden.—Right Worshipful Junior Grand Warden: It is the order of the Most Worshipful Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the State of Maryland, that this Corner-Stone be now laid with Masonic honors. This his will and pleasure you will proclaim to all present, that the occasion may be observed with due order and solemnity.

Junior Grand Warden.—Brethren, and all who are present, take notice, that the Most Worshipful Grand Master will now proceed to lay this Corner-Stone of the Monument in due Masonic form. You will observe the order and decorum becoming the solemn and important ceremonies in which we are about to engage.

HYMN.—Tune “America.”

Father of love and might,
Send forth thy holy light
    On us to shine;
Be thou our Sovereign Lord,
And may thy Holy Word
Be to us shield and sword,
    Master Divine.

Bound in one Brotherhood,
Owning one common blood,
    Children of thine;
Fill us with kindness,
Prompt to relieve distress,
Wearing thy true impress,
    Master Divine.

With joyful hands, to-day,
 This Corner-Stone we lay
     With Corn and Wine :
 But do thou build up one.
 Wrought in the living stone
 Of our true hearts alone.
     Master Divine.

Saviour Omnipotent,
 Crown Thon our good intent,
     With grace of Thine :
 Honor this stone we rear ;
 And when thou shalt appear,
 Save us who gather here,
     Master Divine.

PRAYER, . . . . . BY THE GRAND CHAPLAIN.

Grand Master.—Right Worshipful Grand Treasurer: You will read the inscription on the Corner-Stone, and list of the contents of the box.

(The Grand Treasurer will here read the contents.)

Grand Master.—There being no objection, I now order you, Brother Grand Treasurer, to deposit the Box, with its contents, in the place prepared for its reception.

The principal Architect then presents the Working Tools to the Grand Master, who directs the Grand Marshal to present them to the Deputy Grand Master, and Senior and Junior Grand Wardens.

SOLEMN MUSIC BY THE BAND.

The Grand Master, the Deputy Grand Master and Grand Wardens then descend from the platform, the Grand Master taking the Trowel, the Deputy Grand Master the Square, and the Senior Grand Warden the Level, and the Junior Grand Warden the Plumb; the Grand Master standing at the East of the Stone, his Deputy on his right, the Senior Grand Warden at the West, and the Junior Grand Warden at the South side of the Stone. The Grand Master then spreads the cement: after which he directs the Grand Marshal to order the Craftsmen to lower the Stone. [This is done by three motions, viz:—1st, by lowering a few inches and stopping, when public Grand Honors are given; 2d, again lowering a few inches, and giving Grand Honors; 3d, letting the Stone down to its place and giving Grand Honors as before. The Square, Level and Plumb are then applied to the Stone by the proper Officers.]

Grand Master.—Right Worshipful Deputy Grand Master: What is the proper Jewel of your office?

Deputy Grand Master.—The Square.

Grand Master.—Have you applied the Square to those parts of the Stone that should be square?

Deputy Grand Master.—I have, Most Worshipful Grand Master, and the Craftsmen have done their duty.

Grand Master.—Right Worshipful Senior Grand Warden: What is the proper Jewel of your office?

Senior Grand Warden.—The Level.

Grand Master.—Have you applied the Level to the Stone?

Senior Grand Warden.—I have, Most Worshipful Grand Master, and the Craftsmen have done their duty.

Grand Master.—Right Worshipful Junior Grand Warden: What is the proper Jewel of your office?

Junior Grand Warden.—The Plumb.

Grand Master.—Have you applied the Plumb to the several edges of the Stone?

Junior Grand Warden.—I have, Most Worshipful Grand Master, and the Craftsmen have done their duty.

Grand Master.—This Stone having been duly tested and found to be well-formed, true and trusty, it remains for me to finish the work.

The Grand Master then gives three knocks upon the Stone, saying—

“Men and Brethren here assembled, be it known unto you, that we are free and lawful Masons, true and faithful to the laws of our country, professing to fear God, and confer benefits on mankind. We have amongst us concealed from the eyes of man secrets which cannot be divulged, and which have never been discovered by the outside world; but those secrets are lawful and honorable, and not repugnant to the laws of God or man. Unless our Craft were good and our calling honorable, we should not have lasted for so many centuries, nor should we have been honored with the patronage of so many illustrious men in all ages, who have ever shown themselves ready to promote our interests and defend us from our adversaries. We have assembled here, to-day, in the face of this vast company, to lay the Corner-Stone of this Monument, which we trust may be safely completed and stand for ages both as an ornament to this place and a Monument to the ashes of the thousands who repose around it.” So mote it be.—Amen.

ANTHEM, . . . . . BY THE CHOIR.

The Grand Marshal then presents to the Deputy Grand Master the Cornucopia containing Corn, which he pours upon the Stone.

The Grand Marshal then presents the Cup of Wine to the Senior Grand Warden, who pours it on the Stone.

The Grand Marshal then presents the Cup of Oil to the Junior Grand Warden, who pours it on the Stone.

Grand Master.—May the All-Bounteous Author of Nature bless the inhabitants of this country with all the necessary conveniences and comforts of life, assist in the erection and completion of this Monument, protect the workmen against every accident, and long preserve this structure from decay—so that it may stand in all its beauty long after the bodies of those deposited here shall have crumbled into sepulchral dust; and finally grant us all a supply of the Corn of Nourishment, the Wine of Refreshment, and the Oil of Joy. So mote it be.—Amen.

The Grand Master then delivers over the various implements of architecture to the principal Architect, saying:

WORTHY SIR.—Having thus, as Grand Master of Masons of the State of Maryland, laid the Corner-Stone of this structure, I now deliver these implements of your profession into your hands, intrusting you with the superintendence and direction of the work, having full confidence in your skill and capacity to conduct the same.

CONCLUDING ODE.

MUSIC—"TURIN."

Placed in form the Corner-Stone,
True and Trusty, Brothers own,
Come and bring in thought sincere,
Hands to help, and hearts to cheer.

Chorus.—Come and bring, &c.

Marked with love, the Master's will Kindly proved the work of skill—
Beauteous forms in grace shall rise
'Neath the arch of favoring skies.

Chorus.—Beauteous forms, &c.

Join we now our offering true
While our homage we renew;
Bear to Him whose praise we sing
Thanks that from each bosom spring.

Chorus.—Bear to Him, &c.

When on Earth our work is o'er,
Be a dearer life in store,
Each in form, in heart upright,
Taught by Truth's unerring light.

Chorus.—Each in form, &c.

THE ORATION OF EX-GOVERNOR BRADFORD.

Ex-Governor BRADFORD then delivered the Oration.

We have met here to-day, my countrymen, on one of the most memorable of the battle fields of our civil war, and we stand upon a site selected from the midst of it as an appropriate resting place for those who here laid down their lives as a sacrifice to the cause of free government and a National Union. We have come at the instance of the trustees, to whom the subject has been more especially committed, to dedicate by some public and official proceeding, on this, the anniversary of the battle, the spot so selected, hallowed as it is already, with every hill around it, in the heart of the nation.

To unite in this ceremony, the President of the United States, several members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice of the United States, members of the National Legislature, Governors or other distinguished representatives of most of the States whose citizens formed the army of the Union, have honored us with their presence, meaning, I am sure, for themselves and those they represent to express by that presence their enduring gratitude to the soldiers, living or dead, who so nobly stood by them in their darkest hour of trial.

With such a company around me, and this vast throng in front, I feel as you may well imagine, to the fullest extent the responsibility of the duty to which I have been honored—an honor for which I am doubtless chiefly indebted to the accidental circumstance that I was to some extent officially connected with the initiation of the Cemetery, so far, at least, as the selection of its site was concerned.

When, directly after the battle of Antietam, an order was issued by the Executive of Maryland returning thanks to the officers and men of the Union army who had so successfully expelled the invader from our State, the Commanding General of that army, to whom it was transmitted, responded to it in terms that challenged our attention. Expressing, on behalf of the Army of the Potomac, their thanks for our appreciation of their achievements, and their hopes that no Rebel army would again pollute our State, he concluded by committing to us the remains of their gallant comrades who now rested beneath its soil. A commission so touchingly confided to the people of the State, to say nothing of the duty otherwise incumbent on them, could never become with them a subject of indifference or neglect, and at the first meeting, therefore, of their representatives in the General Assembly of January, 1864, an Act was passed authorizing the purchase of a part of the battle field for the reception of its dead, and an appropriation of five thousand dollars placed at the command of the Governor for that purpose. Directly thereafter he visited the ground, examined it, and after consultation with prominent citizens, selected this spot, embracing in its view the most interesting points to the field of battle, as the proper site for the proposed cemetery. Subsequent legislation increased the State's appropriation to fifteen thousand dollars. Trustees were appointed to superintend the work. Other States came generously forward to participate in the undertaking, and by their united efforts it is hoped that the Cemetery will become in time a place worthy the noble purpose to which we to-day devote it, and of the nation to whom the charge of it should properly belong.

In recurring to the events which, in connection with this day's proceedings, seem to require a brief notice at our hands, it is a subject of congratulation that we can survey them at present from a stand-point which ought to secure for them a calm and dispassionate consideration. Those influences of passion or policy which to some extent are almost inseparable from all accounts of military operations, prepared whilst the war itself was raging, are rapidly, it is to be hoped, at an end, or if any still linger, they should find no place on such an occasion as this. Yet, in reviewing the details of the sanguinary conflict to which we are about to refer, we find some difficulty, with all the assistance that established peace and the lapse of time have furnished, to fix with proper historical accuracy some of the facts immediately connected with it, more especially the precise force of the Confederate army in that action. The number of the Union army engaged therein, computed as it has been, not only from official records, but those records made up after ample time had elapsed for the correction of errors, may be considered as authentically established. It comprised 87,164 men of all arms.

In regard to the Confederate force, the accounts are more conflicting. The Union commander, in estimating it at upwards of 97,000 men, basing his estimate on all the information received from prisoners, deserters and refugees, has probably overstated the number; whilst, on the other hand, our knowledge of the size of that army shortly before it crossed into Maryland would warrant us in saying that the straggling, to which its commanders chiefly ascribe its subsequent reduction, must have exceeded all straggling ever known in the history of armies, if, when it reached the Antietam, it numbered only 40,000 men.

General Lee, I believe, in a report prepared by him a few days after the action closed, says that he went into it with only that number, but in that reckoning he must undoubtedly have excluded the three divisions which, under A. P. Hill, McLaws and Walker, he had several days before detached to different points to aid in the investment of Harper's Ferry, that had not returned at the commencement of the action on the evening of the 16th, but came in most opportunely to his support before its conclusion on the following day. This inference is rendered certain by other Southern accounts of the number engaged.

Confederate historians and newspapers in those days, however, under certain circumstances, they might at times have attempted to deceive us by an inflated account of their military power, were by no means given to such an exaggeration, when the battle was over, and they were summing up its incidents; yet, a leading newspaper at Richmond, professing to give four days afterwards authentic particulars of the battle, declared that it was opened on the evening of the 16th of September, with all their available force, "60,000 strong." A later, and looking to the means of information enjoyed, probably a still more reliable authority, a Confederate historian who has published "a Southern history of the war," in describing the battle of Antietam, states that for half the day it was fought, on the Confederate side with "a force of 45,000," and for the remaining half "with no more than an aggregate of 70,000 men."

I think, therefore, that the discrepancies in the Confederate accounts of their force have been the result of the different periods of the action to which they have severally referred; some having regard to the time that preceded the arrival of their divisions from the neighborhood of the Ferry, and others including these divisions in their statements. All things therefore considered, and allowing for that portion of our force that could not take part in the action, there could not have been much difference in the effective strength of the two armies; but if such a difference did exist and in favor of the Union army, it was more than compensated to the Confederates, not only by their choice of positions, but by other influences, which justice to all concerned requires us now to consider.

It may be confidently affirmed, that at no time during the progress of the rebellion did the loyal heart of the country doubt its ultimate result, yet it is equally certain that there were seasons when it quivered with emotion, as it contemplated the results of particular campaigns, or desponded for a moment at the partial failure of long cherished expeditions. At no period of the war were such feelings more rife than during the summer of 1862. In the early spring of that year, the Peninsular expedition had set forth, and the people of the loyal States looked with anxious solicitude to its results, and with earnest hopes that it would retrieve the disasters of the preceding year, and place the Rebel capital at our command. In every movement of the army in that direction, in all its marches, all its toils, its victories and reverses, from Yorktown to Williamsburg, on the Chickahominy, at Fair Oaks, Gaines' Mill, Malvern, and on the James, it never took a step to front or rear that it did not carry with it by an inseparable sympathy the throbbing heart of the people. So high wrought had become the popular feeling in that connection, that the slightest indication of success or defeat in the movements of that army exerted, for a time at least, an influence on the public mind entirely disproportioned to any intrinsic importance attaching to it.

It was just when this excitement of the public pulse was at its height, after witnessing the heroic struggle of that army for so many successive weeks, with hopes and fears alternately predominating, that we were suddenly startled with the information that transports were carrying it back to the neighborhood of Washington. The people did not pause to consider whether or how far ulterior objects justified that movement; they saw only in it the confession that for the present Richmond was beyond our reach. Incidents connected with it revealed to them also the fact, surmises in regard to which had already disturbed them, that there was an unfortunate difference of opinion between the Commanding General of that army and the powers that controlled his movements; the reluctance with which he yielded to the peremptory orders for the change of his base of operations soon became known, and created criticisms unavoidably injurious in their tendencies. Our friends did not care to inquire, and certainly I shall enter into no such inquiry to-day, who was right or who was wrong. It was enough, and bad enough to know that the harmony which had once marked our military councils had given place to ill concealed murmurings and misgivings. In this moody condition of the public mind, the Army of the Potomac—necessarily, to some extent, influenced by the same circumstances—its ranks thinned by the casualties of a series of hard fought battles, and enervated by the climatic influences of the Peninsula, reached Aquia Creek and Alexandria in the last week of August.

The occurrences which there awaited it were scarcely of a character to make amends for recent disappointments, or to restore that well poised public confidence, which was becoming dangerously disturbed.

About two months before this period, the authorities at Washington, gathering up the National forces which had been operating under several commanders in the Valley and other parts of Northern Virginia, had massed and reorganized them under the name of the Army of Virginia, and placed them under the command of Major General Pope, who had been called from a Western department for the purpose. Assuming that command, he commenced active military operations about the middle of July; his proclamation on that occasion rung out so cheerily and confidently in tone, that the public pricked up its ear, and readily forbearing any criticism of style, accepted the substance as an assurance of more vigorous policy than had before prevailed, and as foreshadowing a system of tactics which, even if we failed before Richmond, would compensate us with success elsewhere. But on this line, too, disappointments awaited us, all the keener for the expectations thus excited. Our first reverse occurred at Cedar Mountain on the 9th of August, when the corps commanded by General Banks, arrayed unsupported against three divisions of the Rebel army under Jackson, Ewell and Hill, most advantageously posted, after accomplishing all that heroic men could against overpowering odds, was forced back with severe loss.

The withdrawal, simultaneously with this action, of the Army of the Potomac from the James river, enabled Lee to move a large portion of his command to the support of Jackson, who was now in front of Pope, and compelled the latter to commence a retrograde movement, which continued from point to point until he reached the District line. During all the last week of August, Pope's army was kept in almost continual action, leaving little or no time for refreshment or rest; engaged thus every day—although now supported to some extent by a part of the army now arriving from the Peninsula—displaying conspicuous gallantry, and evincing the most heroic powers of endurance—they were nevertheless gradually forced back by Lee's army, the greater part of which had now arrived from Richmond, until after a last ineffectual effort on the old battle field of Bull Run (in which fell that beau ideal of a soldier, the gallant Kearney,) faint and footsore, on the 2d of September, they fell back within the fortifications of Washington.

You will not, I am sure, so far misunderstand me as to suppose, that in referring thus briefly to the campaign of Gen. Pope, I have any design to criticise it. I disclaim as well any such power as such a purpose; whether it failed through his fault or that of others, or without fault anywhere, are questions requiring far more skill in military manœuvres, as well as a more accurate knowledge of facts, than I pretend to possess. Nor is the cause of the failure at all material as regards its influence. I advert to it in this connection simply as one of those unfortunate antecedents immediately preceding the march of Lee into Maryland, which was calculated to exert a depressing influence as well upon the public mind as on the spirits of the army, on which alone we now depended to oppose his passage.

That army was to be composed of what remained of those two once formidable organizations, the Army of the Potomac and the Army of Virginia, constituted each of them, of material, better than which the world never saw, but returning simultaneously from the fields of their recent operations with such heavy losses, so jaded and war-worn, so keenly sensitive, as we may well suppose, to the disappointment the country might feel in the hopes formed of their achievements, that in the new and formidable invasion they were now so suddenly called on to repel, nothing but the sternest sense of patriotic duty and the most determined devotion to the great cause for which they had already sacrificed so much, could have possibly sustained them.

In that trying hour, the first provision to be made was for the reorganization of these shattered armies, and the selection of a commander who could accomplish it and then lead the united host. Whatever doubt the Government authorities, or any of them, or the people of the country or any part of them, might then or since have entertained of the military abilities of General McClellan, there were few then, and probably still fewer to-day, who, in the exigency then existing, would question the wisdom of the order that committed to him this command. His services in a like capacity and under circumstances so strikingly similar that the coincidence is worthy of note, must have been fresh in the recollections of both Government and people. At the time of our earliest great disaster, the first battle of Bull Run, he was conducting active operations in Western Virginia, and the very day after that unfortunate affair a telegram from the President, directing him to turn over his command to another, summoned him to Washington: placed there by the President's order in chief command, he was, in less than a week after that reverse, bringing order out of the confusion which for awhile prevailed. Now, other disasters culminating on the same unfortunate field, demanded again the services of a soldier who, possessing the skill to reorganize our broken columns, could so command their confidence as to inspire them with the enthusiasm necessary to forget disaster. That the Administration, without any disparagement to other distinguished leaders, chose the right man for such an emergency, few, I repeat, will at this day venture to deny.

But little time remained for preparation. Lee and his army, exhilarated at the thought that their long beleaguered capital was at length relieved, encouraged by their recent successes near Manassas, and stimulated by the prospect of the rich supplies which here and along the fertile Cumberland Valley awaited their approach, had, by rapid marching, within four days after Pope's army retired within the Washington entrenchments, crossed the Potomac and encamped around Frederick city. McClellan, reorganizing as he marched, set forth to intercept him. Embarrassed all the time by the doubts which enveloped Lee's designs, fully alive to the vital interests involved in them, compelled for the time to turn his back upon Washington, and yet well aware, and frequently reminded that, after all, that might be Lee's objective point, and his movements in other directions meant only as a feint; with the capital of Pennsylvania and the emporium of Maryland both menaced by the enemy, and the citizens of each watching with anxious concern McClellan's movements, with the natural apprehension that the course of his march might so far uncover their several cities as to open the way to Lee's approach, we may imagine to-day, though even now can scarcely appreciate the responsibilities of the Union commander, and understand some of the reasons for what, in the nervous anxiety of that moment, might have been considered by some as too tardy a pursuit. He was, however, on the right track; the van of his army reached Frederick on the 12th of September, Lee, with the greater part of his command, having left it two days before.

Here, before following the subsequent movements of these armies, allow me to advert briefly to the reception that awaited them respectively on this new theatre of the war on the north of the Potomac. Subsequently, in the course of its progress, Rebel raids and invasions were matters of frequent occurrence, and came to be regarded by us as a thing of course, whenever our usual summer drought reduced the river to a fordable condition; this, however, was our first hostile invasion, and on that and other accounts was regarded by the people of the country, and especially of this State, with absorbing interest and anxiety.

The loyal citizens of the North had been taught to believe that the loyalty of Maryland had at best but an apocryphal existence; that as a patriotic and spontaneous impulse it was limited to a few, whilst, as regarded the great body of our people, it was but a pretended and superficial display, induced chiefly by the presence of the National force. So confident in the early stages of the rebellion had been the appeals of our secessionists, so exorbitant their claims to an assumed social and commercial importance, and so clamorous their denunciations of what they denominated an odious Federal ban, forcing the action of the people into a channel contrary to its natural inclination, that there seemed for a time some excuse for such an opinion, and a few even of our own citizens, who had not watched that strong patriotic undercurrent on which, as on a full mountain stream, the masses of our people were from the first borne onward, came sometimes themselves to the reluctant conclusion that the outside estimate of our loyalty might possibly be true.

General Lee, doubtless confiding in the same representations, only more highly exaggerated, chanced to select as favorable a moment for himself as possible for putting these theories to the test.

To say nothing of the despondency already noticed, resulting from the recent disappointments, a process had just commenced better calculated than anything that had yet occurred to awaken the people of the country to a practical sense of the grim realities of war. The President on the 1st of July having issued a call for three hundred thousand volunteers, followed it on the 4th of August with an order for the draft of a like number of militia. The preliminary details for that draft had been just completed and the enrolling officers sent forth on their mission as Lee made his appearance north of the Potomac. The order for a draft had something startling in the ideas it suggested. No one who was subject to the process had ever witnessed its operation, the country had only a kind of traditional knowledge of the character of the proceeding, all the more exciting for its very vagueness.

It was in this condition of things that Lee encamped his army about Frederick, and none knew better than himself how to take advantage of it. Appointing as the Provost Marshal of the city a former resident, who having once been a person of some political influence, had in the early days of the rebellion attached himself to its fortunes, and observing the most scrupulous forbearance towards the citizens, he next issued to them a proclamation, every sentence of which was studiously adapted to their supposed tastes and political sympathies, and which, if the facts had corresponded with the suggestions of Southern sympathizers and Northern skeptics, would have brought them in crowds to the Confederate standard.

It expressed the deepest sympathy for the "wrongs and outrages" they had suffered; it reminded them of the obligations that bound them to the South by "the strongest social, political and commercial ties;" it depicted the profound indignation of their sister States at the spectacle they presented of "a conquered province;" it appealed to their State pride; alluded to "the military usurpations of armed strangers;" the arrest and imprisonment of their citizens, and "the faithful and manly protest" made against such outrages by a venerable and illustrious jurist who, being a former citizen of this town, was known to be held by its inhabitants in high respect and esteem.

Then reminding them that the people of Maryland possessed a spirit too lofty to submit to such a government, gave them to understand that the Confederate army had come among them to aid them in "throwing off this foreign yoke," and all that was necessary was their co-operation.

Was there ever so fair an opportunity for a semi-loyal, secession-loving people, threatened with a Federal draft, and awaiting only the opportunity to escape, and throw themselves into the arms of their Southern friends!

How did they respond to this opportunity and these eloquent appeals? A confederate officer, who seems to have accompanied the expedition, and has since written an account of it, tells the story in a few words. Confessing to the disappointment that awaited those who expected the Marylanders to rush to arms, he tells us that, on the contrary, "they rushed into their houses and slammed the doors."

The "Rebels," says he, "were regarded not as friends, but enemies, the inhabitants were Union," and the general sentiment was, "Wait, wearers of the gray, the patriots in blue are coming." When they did come, who that saw can ever forget? what heart that even now, does not throb the quicker as it remembers the change from the dogged, moody, scowling, and stifled condition in which the presence of the Confederates had for four days kept that people tortured, to the outburst of joyous, enthusiastic, exuberant and irrepressible loyalty that rung out from cellar to house-top as the boys in blue pressed on upon their rear?

All along their way whenever they appeared, in the towns or among the log cabins of the mountain, up went the National banner, hid away some of them until this day, many doubtless improvised for the occasion, an exacting tribute, I dare say, of many a discarded ribbon and threadbare wrapper, sometimes faded and soiled it may have been, and utterly regardless of the proportions required by army regulations, but every stripe and every star was there, and better still, every heart that beat beneath it was overpoweringly full of the sacred cause of which it was the symbol.

Yet, to this day, with that and every other ordeal—and that was neither the first nor last—by which Maryland loyalty has been tested, there are those who still make it the subject of an ungenerous sneer. I am happy, however, to believe that it never comes from that gallant host that accompanied her sons to the field, but usually from those whose well calculated distance from the scene of conflict placed them as far out of the reach of information as of danger.

When Lee evacuated Frederick, on the 10th of September, directing his course towards this county, he doubtless supposed that the reticent policy and strategic manœuvres he had thus far so successfully pursued, would still have its influence on McClellan's movements, leaving him in doubt as to where the threatened blow would ultimately fall; but by one of those rare occurrences which some may call accident, and others a special Providence, there fell into McClellan's hands on the day of his arrival at Frederick, a copy of Lee's order of march, dated the day before he left that city, and negligently left there by one of his officers. This told the whole story of his contemplated movements, and, possessed of that information, a new vigor was infused into the Union host.

Directing the corps of General Mansfield towards Pleasant Valley, that it might if possible reach and relieve Harper's Ferry before it should be captured by the force Lee had detailed for the purpose, McClellan with the main body of the Union army moved forward towards the South Mountain, on the track Lee had himself taken. The latter having already passed onward towards Boonsboro and Hagerstown, hearing on the evening of the 13th that McClellan was pushing on by the way of Turner's Gap, and surprised, no doubt, at the unwonted vigor and rapidity of his present movements; feeling, too, that unless his progress could be arrested, his own well concerted plans might be frustrated, sent back Hill and Longstreet, with the greater portion of their commands, to check him at that mountain pass. Reaching its crest in advance of the Union army, it is easy to perceive how even a smaller force than these two leaders then commanded, could, with the advantage which their position secured, hold in check for a time our advancing column struggling up its eastern slope, but our men, though sure to encounter a murderous fire from the ridges around them, were not to be long arrested in their progress.

Pushing up the craggy steep, they forced back, step by step, the Confederate riflemen, who were assailing them from behind trees and stone fences, and as the last rays of the setting sun fell upon the Union banner it was floating triumphant on the summit of the ridge. It cost us, however, fifteen hundred of the flower of our army, including the skillful and valiant General Reno, who, with the advance throughout the day, was killed just before its close whilst reconnoitering in front.

The morning of the 15th dawned upon the Union army the sole occupants of the mountain, the Confederates having retired during the night, and McClellan resuming his march, halted that afternoon on the east bank of the Antietam. The evening was passed in assigning positions to his several corps, posting his batteries and making preparations for crossing next morning. Lee having previously reached and crossed the stream, had secured the choice of positions, an advantage which he did not fail to improve. A telegram from President Lincoln, dated at Washington about the hour that McClellan reached the Antietam, conveyed to him the President's last command; in Mr. Lincoln's own earnest and sententious style, it merely said, "God bless you, and all with you: destroy the Rebel army if possible." With this parting benediction they bivouacked that night on the eastern bank of the stream.

On the morning of the 16th, the Rebel batteries occupying commanding positions on these various heights upon this side the creek, opened fire upon our ranks, but with how little effect may be inferred from the account of General Hill, who, in a subsequent report of the action, describes it as the "most melancholy farce of the war," they being unable, as he says, to cope with the "Yankee guns."

After some little delay, required to make an alteration of the position of some of the corps, General Hooker, who had been entrusted with the duty of turning the enemy's left flank, crossed his command by an upper ford, and not long afterwards encountered the troops of General Hood, who, in anticipation of our movement, had been transferred from the enemy's right wing to his left to strengthen that part of his line. It was nearly dark before the troops of Hooker and Hood met, and after a brief but spirited contest, in which the Pennsylvania Reserves, under General Meade, opened the action, the Confederate advance was forced back, when night intervening, the combatants rested on their arms so near together, that it is said some of the pickets of the two lines unconsciously intermingled.

The battle of the 17th opened at the dawn of day on the spot where the skirmish of the previous evening had closed; each side seemed to have looked to this point as the one to be particularly strengthened, and as though anticipating the tremendous struggle of which it was to be the centre. General Mansfield's corps, composed of the two divisions of Generals Green and Williams, had crossed over in the night and taken post a mile to the rear of General Hooker; whilst on the Confederate side, General Jackson had brought one of his divisions to the front, and substituting two of his brigades for those of Hood, that had suffered from the engagement of the previous evening, placed the other—the old Stonewall division—in reserve in the woods on the west of the Hagerstown road.

In the whole history of the battle-fields of the rebellion, it would be perhaps difficult to find a spot which for an entire day was assailed and defended with such persevering, obstinate and concentrated valor as the one to which I now refer, embracing the ground on both sides the road just mentioned, and in close proximity to yonder little church that nestles now so quietly in the margin of the woods.

From early dawn till dark the conflict surged and swelled across it in one continual tide, advancing and receding as reinforcements from the one side or the other came to the support of their comrades. It was opened on our side with the three divisions of Generals Meade, Doubleday and Ricketts, forming General Hooker's corps, who, after an hour of fearful carnage, succeeded in driving back Jackson's advanced line. Before, however, their exulting cheers had fairly ceased, they were themselves compelled to retire before his veteran reserves that now come to his relief, supported by Hill's division and Hood's refreshed brigades. The corps of General Mansfield coming next to our support, reinforced the shattered command of Hooker, and recovering the ground that had been lost, swept onward again to the road and seized a corner of the woods beyond.

Again, however, our tenure was but temporary; both our Corps Commanders had fallen—the veteran Mansfield and the intrepid Hooker—the one mortally, the other very painfully wounded, and their commands fearfully thinned, were again forced to fall back, when, just as they were retiring, two divisions of General Sumner's Corps coming fresh upon the field, hurled back once more the Rebel line, and held for a time definite possession of the woods about the little church. The divisions of Generals Richardson and French falling in about this time to the support of Sumner, rushed valiantly to the front, and the tide of battle was once more flooding in our favor, when, just as victory seemed within our grasp, two fresh Confederate divisions, under McLaws and Walker, the one just arrived from Harper's Ferry, and the other detached from their right wing, turned again for a time the fortunes of the day, and once more drove back our tottering line over that hard fought field.

Two other of our division commanders had been now lost to us—the lamented Richardson and the heroic General Sedgwick, the former falling mortally wounded, and the latter, though wounded several times, still struggling to keep the field. To and fro the contest had now swayed for seven hours; it was afternoon, and the combatants stood, as it were, at bay, each appearing confident of their power to defend, but doubtful of their ability to assail.

Now most opportunely appeared another auxiliary on the scene, and we may imagine the tumultuous joy that reanimated our exhausted troops as, turning their eyes towards yonder creek, they beheld two divisions of General Franklin's Corps, freshly arrived from Pleasant Valley, and hastening forward to their support. Under their gallant leaders, Slocum and Smith, they swept on in a resistless charge; running, and cheering as they ran, they dashed across the down-trodden cornfield, cleared the woods of their Confederate occupants, and at last held final possession of the ground so often lost and won, until “Night her course began and over heaven

Inducing darkness, grateful truce imposed
And silence on the odious din of war.”

On the extreme left of our line the Ninth Army Corps, under General Burnside, occupied during the forenoon the left bank of the Antietam, near the lower bridge, waiting a favorable opportunity for forcing a passage. The precipitous character of the banks of the creek at that point, and the advantageous position secured by the enemy's batteries along these heights to the west of it, postponed, it would seem, that opportunity until about one o'clock; but at that hour a gallant charge of the 51st New York and 51st Pennsylvania regiments carried the bridge, and crossing by that and a neighboring ford the whole Corps crossed over. Afterwards assailing yonder heights, from which a Rebel battery had been pouring upon them a constant and destructive fire, they succeeded in dislodging the enemy, and it is said that some of their assailing force nearly reached the village; but here, as on our right, victory seemed to vibrate.

A. P. Hill, with his division, by a rapid march from Harper's Ferry, which they left that morning, reached the ground in the afternoon, and joining his command to the Rebel right wing, their united efforts drove back our troops from their advanced position, but replying with spirit, and supported by the batteries on the eastern bank of the creek, they, after desperate fighting, in which General Rodman, one of their division commanders, fell mortally wounded, were enabled still to maintain their stand upon its western shore, whilst the Rebels fell back to the heights as darkness closed the day.

The bridge has been known in the neighborhood ever since the battle as the Burnside Bridge, which name, for its pastoral as well as patriotic significance, it will probably retain forever.

Thus ended only, for want of light to pursue it further, a battle that had raged for nearly fourteen hours, and which beyond doubt was the fiercest and bloodiest of the war.

Twelve thousand of our dead and wounded warriors, and at least as many more of the enemy lay stretched upon the field.

I have, of course, not ventured to attempt more than the merest outline of some of the most prominent points of the action. To note the movements of the various divisions, brigades and regiments, their marches, manœuvres and combinations, and the names of the officers who led them, even if I possessed the information necessary for the purpose, and that would insure me against doing injustice to any, would far exceed the limits permitted to such an address.

I should rejoice to be able to refer by name to every man who that day did his duty, from the General-in-Chief to the humblest subordinate in the ranks, but I have the satisfaction of knowing that they are all registered elsewhere, and that neither their names nor deeds are dependent on this ephemeral record.

Viewing these hills and valleys, as we do to-day, in the full luxuriance of their autumnal beauty, restored by the indomitable energy of their thrifty population to the condition they presented before hostile armies selected them as the theatre of their contest, and then calling up to memory or imagination, the spectacle they exhibited when that contest closed, and the harvest of death lay heaped in horrid swarths all over their undulating surfaces, and how impressive, almost appalling, is the sense of the destruction which a few brief hours had accomplished?

The day before the battle, this region, one of the most beautiful and productive of the State, in its orchards and meadows, cornfields and pastures, woodlands and water courses, presented

"A happy rural seat of various view," that filled the eye of the visitor with delight inferior only to that of the happy husbandmen, its owners. They, thus far knowing little of war, save by its distant echoes, awoke on the morning of the 17th of September, 1862, to all its dread realities —

"Hark to that roar whose swift and deafening peal,
In countless echoes through the mountains ring;
Now swells the intermingling din: the jar
Frequent and frightful of the bursting bomb;
The falling tree, the shriek, the groan, the shout,
The ceaseless clangor and the rush of men,
Inebriate with rage. — Loud and more loud
The discord grows, till pale Death shuts the scene
And o'er the conqueror and the conquered draws
His cold and bloody shroud!

But let us pass from this melancholy retrospect to the more agreeable contemplation of the tribute due to the valiant dead that lie here now at rest around us. The posthumous honors rendered to departed patriots are commended to us by the example of the noblest nations of antiquity, and are prompted by those impulses of the human heart which in all ages seek to perpetuate some record or reminiscence of the good and the brave. In the best days of the republics of old, these mortuary observances were far more frequent and impressive than in modern times: they not only embalmed the bodies of their warriors and statesmen, but their funeral ceremonies, the eulogies pronounced over them, and the monuments erected to their memory, were recognized as of national obligation. Their exploits were chronicled and elaborated by the poets and orators of their nation, and have been handed down to the present day as a classic theme, on which the youthful mind still delights to dwell.

It was a custom with the Athenians to appoint every year a man for the observance of solemn funeral rites over the remains of their heroes who had fallen during the year: their bones were collected together, their friends were invited to be present, their remains were decorated as the fancy or affection of those friends might suggest, and, after three days thus employed, these remnants of mortality were carried in solemn funeral pomp to a public temple prepared for their reception. Nor were they forgotten whose mouldering forms it had been impossible to recover, for them, or in memory of them, an empty bier, the most gorgeous in the procession, was especially dedicated; and a sepulchre situated in the costliest suburb of the city received the sumptuous coffins, the empty and the full.

We have, as yet, established no such national anniversaries, nor yet provided any such gorgeous pageantry. No storied urn or cypress coffin may contain the remains of our soldiers' dead: many of them doubtless have never yet been gathered within any recognized cemetery, and still occupy the shallow grave on the margin of the battle field, or near some hospital site, their last resting place probably altogether unmarked, or if marked at all, only by a rough stake, and occasionally a few rude letters; but whatever be its condition or wherever it may be, on the banks of the Mississippi or among the mountains of Pennsylvania, in the morasses of the Chickahominy, or in this quiet and well-ordered cemetery, Greece nor Rome, in their palmiest days, never offered up costlier sacrifices in the cause of human freedom than "the hearts once pregnant with celestial fire," which these rude sepulchres entomb.

In ancient times it was undoubtedly true, especially as regarded the honors to living men—and probably no age may be altogether exempt from the imputation—that in the costly statues erected to, and the magnificent orations showered upon, the successful soldier or accomplished statesman, there lurked not unfrequently some personal consideration mingling with the motives that suggested them. Sometimes it was fear that prompted the timid thus to propitiate the wrath of the powerful; sometimes it was a servile adulation that, in the time-serving, sought by such means to secure a recompense in the shape of other honors or emoluments to be reciprocated. It was doubtless the knowledge of such corruptions, and an appreciation of the motives that should always control such memorials, that prompted Cato, when once asked by a friend, why no statues had been erected to him, whilst Rome was crowded with so many others, to reply as he did, that he had much rather his countrymen should inquire why he had no statue, than why he had any; but the character and circumstances of the honors we are here to render to our patriot dead, not only vindicate their motive, but in that motive itself is found the very germ of the honor we would confer. Let statues or monuments to the living or the dead tower ever so high, the true honor, after all, is not in the polished tablet or towering column, but in that pure, spontaneous and unaffected gratitude and devotion of the people that enshrines the memory of the honored one in the heart, and transmits it from age to age long after such costly structures have disappeared.

The only honor accorded to Miltiades, the great deliverer of Athens, was to be represented in a picture, painted by order of its citizens, at the head of the other nine commanders of the heroic ten thousand, animating his followers to the attack of the hostile force which outnumbered them ten to one: and yet that simple painting, preserved in the affections of succeeding generations, existed for centuries thereafter, whilst the three hundred statues which in a later and corrupter age, were erected by the same people in honor of Demetrius, were all demolished, even in his lifetime.

Thus in our heart would we enshrine the memory of the Union soldier: generations yet unborn shall recount to their offspring the history of their valor: and long after brass and marble have crumbled into dust, shall their names be preserved as the men who perished to perpetuate what their fathers had so struggled to establish—this Heaven-appointed Government of popular freedom.

A sepulchre, as I have said, was formerly prepared for the heroes of ancient Greece in the most conspicuous suburb of their cities; this custom, however, had one miserable exception, and for which this day's solemnities on the field of Antietam furnish an appropriate parallel.

Such was the extraordinary valor displayed by those who fell fighting against the Persian host on the memorable battle field of Marathon, that the Athenians determined that their sepulchre should be separated and distinguished from those of their other heroes. The most honorable distinction they could suggest was to bury them on the field where they had fallen: and thus this little marshy plain, immortalized by this battle of more than two thousand years ago, was pointed out to succeeding ages by the lofty mound, around which many a tourist has since lingered, and which, to this day, marks the spot where the Athenian heroes fell.

May not imagination, as it seeks to portray the future of this great American Republic, without any overstraining of its powers, see the coming time, distant it possibly may be, but none the less desirable or certain, when her sons from every State shall seek this little hamlet for its hallowed memories of the past, and coming from the South as well as North, reunited in fact as well as theory, in affection as well as formality, shall stand here together as pilgrims at a common shrine, and forgetting the feuds of the past, save only the mighty powers which their results developed, mutually admit, as they appeal to the records of this field, that they have sprung from the same stock, and united in the same destiny, entitled to the same respect, and animated by the same heroic and patriotic impulses?

This day, my countrymen, (the 17th of September,) happens to be the anniversary of another event in our political history, not less memorable than the one which to-day, more particularly, engages our attention: in some respects it is so intimately connected with the considerations which the occasion suggests that it is scarcely proper it should pass without notice.

It was upon this day eighty years ago that the representatives of our ancestors, with Washington at their head, after four months' deliberation, adopted the Federal Constitution--an instrument so remarkable for the circumstances that gave birth to it, for the wonderful prosperity which sprung from it, for the reverence with which from generation to generation it has been handed down to us, that there has probably been no record of a like character which has exerted so important an influence on the history of a government or the rise and progress of a people. The political condition of the country at the time of its adoption, in some of its aspects, was not unlike the present. We had just concluded a war upon the issue of which depended the existence of the nation: that war, combined with other circumstances, had led to the formation of parties, so widely differing in some of their theories of government, that there seemed but little hope of constructing it upon any plan upon which the two extremes would ever unite. Upon one side political leaders were striving to establish a strong and consolidated Government, ignoring almost the Government of the States, whilst on the other were those who were for investing the latter with all substantial authority and making the General Government little more than their general agent.

These leaders--honest, doubtless, all of them in their own opinions--had by their continual discussion and the widely different views they promulgated, brought the country to a critical condition, and filled the minds of its most reflecting people with serious fears that the great results of the war would be swept away by these jarring elements.

In consequence alone of these dissensions, and the mutual jealousies and suspicions they engendered, four years elapsed after the close of the war before any consent could be procured either from Congress or the States for the assembling of a Constitutional Convention, and with the acknowledged imperfections of the existing articles of confederation, and amidst the most disheartening embarrassments, the result, chiefly of those imperfections, the country staggered along as best it could, without either an Executive or Judicial department.

Then, at last, there assembled that illustrious body of statesmen that framed the Constitution under which we live. They represented, undoubtably, constituents maintaining each of the theories of government to which I have adverted, but mindful of the condition of the country, resolved, if possible, to rescue it, and with this noble purpose resisting the impatient behests of party, they renounced the ultraisms which distinguished both the consolidation and State right schools, and provided a Government which so judiciously combined the two principles, and so distinctly assigned to each its proper sphere, that the moderate and reflecting of all parties united in its support, and the Constitution received the unanimous ratification of the States.

After the lapse of three-quarters of a century, and after it had elevated us to a point of national importance and renown, which its most ardent advocates could never have predicted, it was destined to encounter its first great trial.

I am not about to recur to the history of the rebellion, to the passions that prompted its leaders, or the metaphysical plausibilities by which they seduced their followers, but it was only after the theories to which they had been long attached had been allied with more substantial and powerful interests, that they ventured to lay violent hands on that work of our fathers to which they and all of us had so often sworn allegiance. How it resulted it is scarcely necessary to remind you. The people, though occasionally differing on questions of construction of doubtful clauses of the Constitution, had yet been trained in such habits of reverence for all its undisputed provisions, that no section and no party that ever ventured to express contrary sentiments, could, unless blinded by insane passion, leave foreseen aught but ultimate ruin and annihilation. And although the late rebellion, by a combination of various interests, influences and issues, sustained itself for four years with wonderful energy, and though at times, and to a limited extent, there were subordinate issues invoked also against it, yet the great original, abiding and conclusive force that filled our armies and fought our battles, was the resolute purpose to stand by the Constitution of our fathers and the Union it had established.

Upon this line we commenced the war, and on this line, thanks to our whole army and their distinguished commander, we fought it out to signal and complete triumph.

But now, when we had safely passed what for the last thirty years had been generally reckoned the greatest danger to the Constitution, and that and other results of the conflict had filled us with the highest hopes of the future, and given us, as we supposed, the assurance of complete tranquillity for the present, suddenly evil influences are found still at work, sometimes in the shape of fears, honest or simulated; of dangers in the future, sometimes prompted by vindictive recollections of supposed injuries in the past, more frequently than either, perhaps, instigated by old party leaders, who play upon these fears and memories with no other object than to recover some old office or power they have lost, or to retain others they have more lately won, until our exultation at the results we have achieved is arrested by our apprehension of evils yet to come.

Think not for a moment, my friends, that I am about to desecrate the solemnity of such an occasion by any discussion of the partisan topics of the day. God forbid that the time should ever come, or party lines be ever so drawn, that a plea for the Constitution shall be reckoned as a badge of party fealty. The only party in whose behalf I would this day raise a voice is the party of moderation and conciliation. The only party against which I would this day warn you is made up of those ultras of all sides, whose agitations have contributed so largely to the disasters of the past, and which, if not arrested, may be the forerunner of others equally deplorable in the future. Against such agitators would I therefore invoke—and take this as an appropriate occasion of doing so—the moderate, disinterested, reflecting and patriotic people of the country. It was by this class, as I have already said, that the Constitution was created, and it will be by this class that it must be saved.

If it still contains defects, if it is growing obsolete, or keeps not up with the progressive ideas of the age, amend it by the means which its own provisions prescribe; but whilst it is still acknowledged as our organic law, and we daily swear to it allegiance, let it be in all our political controversies the umpire whose decree shall be final.

Come the peril to it whence it may, from State rights or consolidation, let me on this, the anniversary of its adoption, in the name of the men who made it, by the memory of the men who have died for it, upon this spot where blood has been so profusely shed in its behalf, appeal to you to preserve, protect and defend it.

Many of the passages of the oration were applauded, and as the orator took his seat they were loud and oft repeated.

The following hymn was then sung :

HYMN II.—“America.”

Hallowed be all around !
 This place is holy ground,
     Henceforth, for aye ;
 Here mountain shadows wave
 O'er many a cherished grave,
 Where sleep the young and brave,
     Home from the fray !

Here, where the flash and roar
 Battle and carnage bore
     Over the main,
 Soft, on your lowly bed,
 Rest your fame-laurel'd head,
 Our noble patriot dead,
     By treason slain !

Grief stricken hearts have throbb'd—
 Sable clad homes have sobb'd
     Far from your rest ;
 Listened for steps in vain,
 That ne'er shall come again,
 To swell the victor's train,
     From East to West !

Antietam's liquid gem
 Murns your requiem
     In mournful strain !
 Angels unseen stand near,
 Bright guard of honor here,
 Till Christ, our Lord appear,
     Mighty to reign !

Silence and sadness round—
 No bugle's martial sound
     Your sleep breaks now.
 Columbia, saved, now sheathes
 Her conquering sword ; Fame wreathes
 Where'er true manhood breathes,
     Your pale, cold brow !

“Glory to God on high,”
 Peal through earth, sea and sky,
     “Good will to men !”
 Blending and rising higher,
 Like Pentecostal fire,
 Let Freedom's strains inspire
     All hearts ! Amen !

After the singing of the hymn, the poem written by Clarence F. Bahler, of New York, who was absent by reason of illness, was read by G. L. Cranmer, Esq., the Trustee of the State of West Virginia, as follows:

THE DEDICATION POEM.

Upon a bright September morn,
 Five years ago to-day,
 The pleasant hills of Maryland
 Green and untrodden lay;
 While autumn leaves were strewn around
 In purple and in gold,
 Like that Assyrian host o'er which
 The plague at midnight rolled.

The pheasant beat his long tattoo
 Where soon the drum would play,
 And merrily Antietam creek
 Went singing on its way;
 But many a tattered banner thrilled
 Upon the armory wall,
 As if it felt the coming
 Of a tempest soon to fall.

The tramp of Lee's battalions
 Struck faintly on the ear,
 As thunder in the distance tolls
 A storm is drawing near;
 While stretched along yon bristling height
 The Rebel files of gray,
 Like leaden clouds that soon would burst
 In ruin and dismay.

But round the flag of freedom
 Her stalwart yeomen stood,
 Resolved its stars should never set
 Till they went down in blood.
 No flower of speech lost on the blast
 Had answered her appeal,
 But marches like a gathering storm
 Or avalanche of steel.

With every hamlet a battle
 To the thunder of their tread,
 As if the Revolution's graves
 Were giving up their dead;
 And students fighting in their decades
 The Purge wars of old,
 Woke in a holier cause to bleed
 On red Antietam's plain.

The combat opened : and between
 The valleys whistling then,
 From every sulphur cloud was heard,
 The cheers of Hooker's men ;
 And where the yellow corn had waved
 Artillery sowed the field,
 With shot and shell that make it still
 An iron harvest yield.

'Mid showers of grape and canister,
 Along our lines of blue,
 The soul of Seventy-Six struck with
 The arm of Sixty-Two,
 Beneath our flag, the Lord of Hosts
 Fought on this reeking sod,
 For traitors to their country
 Are traitors to their God.

In freedom's holy brotherhood
 The Saxon and the Gaul,
 Shoulder to shoulder as they fell,
 Shared glory's crimson fall.
 The Pennsylvania husbandman
 And Western mountaineer
 Across the swarthy raider lay,
 With empty musket, here.

Here fell the dauntless Mansfield,
 Whose streaming locks of snow
 Could never for a moment chill
 The fiery heart below :
 And yonder bridge, that Burnside
 So gallantly did hold,
 Is now as classic as the pass
 The Spartans held of old.

Young Rodman as he prostrate lay
 Still waved his flag on high,
 And faintly with his dying breath
 Sent up a battle cry.

Well might Duryea, as true a knight,
 As ever couched a lance,
 Smile grimly to behold his Zouaves
 With springing step advance ;
 And in their onset Meagher's brigades
 Of Erin's hardy sons
 Paused not till they were looking down
 The muzzles of the guns.

The hardy form of Hooker
 Tossed on the surging flood,
 Till he had shown a rifleman
 The color of his blood :

While Sumner, Meade and Sedgwick,
 Like old campaigners, made
 Raw striplings breast like regulars
 The gallant cannonade.

Historic Maryland ! Such deeds
 Have made, with brilliant gleam,
 A Marathon of every plain,
 A Nile of every stream ;
 And nevermore would Europe boast
 Of her scarred grenadiers,
 Could she have seen the work that day
 Done by our volunteers.

Four times yon wood was won and lost,
 Where lay the foe entrenched,
 And to its staff our banner clung
 In scarlet rain bedrenched ;
 When onward swept the brawny troops
 That never charged in vain,
 Our lion-souled Green Mountain boys
 And lumbermen of Maine.

And from their masked entrenchments
 The veteran ranks within
 Were hurled as if each bayonet
 A thunderbolt had been.

Ah ! sweetly by the planter's porch
 The orange tree will rise.
 But never more its snowy bloom
 Will cheer his wistful eyes.
 For many a year to come his blood,
 That blade or bullet drew,
 Will make thy roses, Maryland,
 Spring with a redder hue.

Thin grew the host that fought beneath
 The fallen stars, and then,
 Like gray wolves, backward, inch by inch,
 Retreating to their den,
 Unto the cover of their works
 The baffled horde withdrew,
 And soon upon the dust of strife
 The evening sprinkled dew.

Then martial strains rose from our camp,
 And as the wounded listened,
 The nerveless hand was clenched again—
 Again the glazed eye glistened ;
 Some thought of fair ones, who afar
 Would name them from the pillow,
 Or maidens who that night would sit
 Alone beneath the willow.

Since thought of stately marble halls,
 That in the city tower'd,
 And others of a humble cot,
 Amid the vines embower'd;
 Yet, whensoever their thoughts were turn'd
 As memory's magnet drew them,
 The spot was hallowed by the name
 Of "Home, Sweet Home," unto them.

But when the morn in beauty broke,
 These heroes who had striven
 So nobly for their homes, had found
 A better home in heaven,
 Then softer grew the hard brown hand,
 As, with a woman's care,
 Rough soldiers gently bore away
 Their fallen comrades—here.

And when the last long trench had close
 Above unnumber'd slain,
 All grades forgot an army lay
 The ramped beneath this plain!
 Yes! in dark barracks underneath
 Rest those who chose the cypress wreath
 In service brief as glorious gained,
 To laurels with dishonor stained.

Re-entr'd with those who bivecome "ill"
 At Marathon and Bunker Hill,
 By louder trump than battle drew,
 They've marshalled for the last review,
 No more the pulse that beats so true
 Will quicken as the loud tattoo
 Ascends at sunrise from the camp,
 Or sturdily beat the measured tramp.

But buds are soon with lither bring'd
 To the first violets of the spring;
 And the grins who have viewed with awe
 The glory of that haunted shore,
 The dread throng of lava over-head,
 The silent cities of the dead,
 As they step brings through the gloom
 From storied tombs—
 No more o'er the deep will come
 To gaze on her shrine at home!
 For every road we tread to-day
 Our nation from some hero may
 Be made more holy and from this spot
 Be made the nation's eyes.

Of Lincoln wear a tender glow
 As on this scene he gazes now.
 I feel a God-like presence near—
 The Great Emancipator's here!
 O death! where is thy sting? O grave!
 Where is thy victory o'er the brave?
 Not with dim sight and tottering frame,
 They sought the dust from which they came
 With eye whose flash seemed of the stern,
 And war embodied in each form.
 They marched at Glory's clarion call
 To graves as to a banquet hall.
 And though sweet voices filled each wind
 From home, cast not one look behind,
 Through such heroic souls as those
 The Lord of Hosts his God-head shows!

Over them no mournful requiem floats
 But bugles peal their loudest notes.
 As to the heaven of Fame they march
 Beneath our flag—its rainbow arch,
 With an eternal furlough blest,
 Sweet, sweet shall be the patriot's rest.
 Fatigued with toil whose fruits sublime
 Are budding on the bough of Time,
 And while above these sainted brave
 One stripe of their old flag shall wave,
 This consecrated spot will be
 A sacred Mecca of the free.

SPEECH OF PRESIDENT JOHNSON.

Governor Swann then introduced to the assembly President JOHNSON, who, advancing to the front of the platform was greeted with applause. He said :

My Fellow Countrymen—In appearing before you it is not for the purpose of making any lengthy remarks, but simply to express my approbation of the ceremonies which have taken place to-day. My appearance on this occasion will be the speech that I will make. My reflections and my meditations will be in silent communion with the dead, whose deeds we are here to commemorate. I shall not attempt to give utterance to the feelings and emotions inspired by the addresses and prayers which have been made and the hymns which have been sung. I shall make attempt at no such thing. I am merely here to give my countenance and aid to the ceremonies on this occasion ; but I must be permitted to express my hope that we may follow the example which has been so eloquently alluded to this afternoon, and which has been so clearly set by the illustrious dead. When we look on you battle field I think of the brave men on both sides, who fell in the fierce struggle of battle, who sleep silent in their graves. Yes, who sleep in silence and peace after the sternest conflict has ceased. Would to God we of the living could imitate their example, as they lay sleeping in peace in their tombs, and live together in friendship and peace. [Applause.] You, my fellow citizens, have my earnest wishes as you have had my efforts in time gone by, in the earliest and most trying perils to preserve the union of these States, to restore harmony to our distracted and divided country, and you shall have my last efforts in vindication of the flag of the Republic and of the Constitution of your fathers. [Applause.]

The benediction was then pronounced, when the President, Cabinet members, Governor Swann and others left the platform. Colonel J. M. Thompson and his assistants formed the military who escorted the President and party to the cars at Keedysville, which place they left at ten minutes to seven o'clock for Washington and Baltimore.

ANTIETAM NATIONAL CEMETERY,

And the LAYING of the CORNER-STONE of the MONUMENT,
SEPTEMBER 17, 1867.

The Marshal and Assistant Marshals will assemble at KEEDYSVILLE, at 9 o'clock, A. M.
The Military will form at KEEDYSVILLE, at 10½ A. M. on the pike leading to Sharpsburg, west of the railroad.

The Masons and other civic bodies will form at the same time, on the pike leading to Sharpsburg, east of the railroad, with their right resting on the railroad crossing.

The head of the column will move at 11 o'clock, A. M., up the pike to the Cemetery grounds.

The Military will form in line at the entrance to the Cemetery, (as may be directed,) and present arms when the President of the United States and all who are to occupy the stand shall pass to the same.

Ladies will occupy the left of the stand, and it is desirable that they be upon the ground as early as 11 o'clock, A. M.

The Exercises will take place as soon as the entire procession is in position on the ground, as follows:
